RAILWAY SPECIAL AGENTS.

Business Transacted at Recent Convention Here.

The recent convention of the railway special agents in this city was a success, and the committee having the local arrangements in charge feel gratified over what was accomplished from organization and social standpoints. The committee was composed of Capt. J. W. Connelly of the Southern railway, G. A. Ogline of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and W. A. Humphrey of the New York Central railroad.

The association has a membership of two hundred and forty, and is rapidly growing, numerically and otherwise. The proceedings here embraced an address of welcome by Commissioner West and response by W. A. Canada of the Atchison. Topeka and Santa Fe railway. There was a report from the committee on by-laws and constitution in allowing proxy votes, and interesting papers were on by-laws and constitution in allowing proxy votes, and interesting papers were read on "Seals and Fasienings" and "Depredations Against Railways," by Messrs. J. M. Pettus and J. J. Hinsey, respectively. George J. Schoeffle of the Eric railroad read a paper entitled "Conference With Master Car Builders," which was fully described, as was the "hold up" bill, now pending in Congress.

W. A. Humphrey of the New York Central discussed "Co-operation Necessary to Prevent Theft by Employes;" C. H. Dawson outlined his policy of organizing terminal railway police at St. Louis and Chicago; J. F. Penn of the M., K. and T. railroad handled the subject, "Witnesses and Fees;" W. E. Chester of the K. C., Ft. S. and G. railway addressed the convention on "Loss and Damage by Theft;" J. G. Ahem of the Southern presented the question of "Commercial Law," and Secretary Dawson read the "Origin and History of the Order."

The question of pass issue as contained in the rate bill furnished food for action and a spirited discussion disclosed a strong opposition to the clause and resulted in the appointment of a committee to visit the Capitol. The committee consists of G. L. Sherer of the S. A. & L. R. R., G. A. Ogline of the B. & O. R. R., Geo. S. Fitzwater of the S. A. & L. R. R., G. A. Ogline of the B. & O. R. R., W. J. Kenney and W. J. Connelly of the Southern.

The Dawson medal was shot for by the revolver team of the association, and was won by L. C. Felts of the Norfolk and Western railway.

Milwaukee was determined upon as the next place for meeting and the following officers were elected:

W. A. Humphrey, N. Y. C., president; L. C. Lardo, C. H. & D. second vice president; Chas. H. Dawson, C., B. & Q., secretary-treasurer.

The association concluded its stay in this city for a visit to Mt. Vernon by rail and Appointment of First Public Printer Noted-Members Enlisted in Defense of Union.

In view of the prospective assembling in this city tomorrow of hundreds of delsgates to the tenth convention of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders which will convene Tuesday forenoon in the Columbia Theater, as told in The Star yesterday in detail, Mr. James L. Feeney, president of Local Union No. 4 of Book-binders, speaking of the Washington organization, says its history is, in fact, a part of the history of the District of Columbia, the society having been in existence many years and taking part in a number of notable happenings here. They will tarry at Atlantic City for a short outing, returning to the grove early in July, in time for Dresident Foster to inaugurate the assembookbinders of the city were unorganized and no regular scale of prices prevailed in any shop. In January, 1850, trouble arose in the bindery of Blake & McKean, on account of the reduction in the price of piece-work. The men refused to accept the reduction, and a strike was inaugurated; but, having no organization funds, the prospects of winning the strike were not at all favorable. "The men held a meeting, and it was de-cided to appoint a committee of two to wait on Mr. Columbus Denham, who was at that time foreman in the bindery of Jacob Gidtime foreman in the bindery of Jacob Gideon, and to consult with him and get his advice in the matter. Mr. Denham was favorably known among all the bookbinders of the city as a conscientious man and a strong advocate of unionism. He told the men that their cause was just, but as they had no organization to assist them it would be impossible to maintain their position, and he advised them to call a meeting of all the journeymen bookbinders in the city and form an organization, adopt a scale of and form an organization, adopt a scale of prices and insist on its enforcement in every bookbindery in the District of Columbia.

Result of a Call.

"At his request and suggestion a call was ssued and Mr. Denham was invited to be present. On February 14, 1850, there assembled in old Temperance Hall the following bookbinders of the District of Columbia: Columbus Denham, Joe A. Deeble, P. H. Caton, T. J. Mulloy, T. F. Stewart, John Tretler, George R. P. Britt, William Pettibone, Ign. M. Knott. John W. Glover, William McLane, Thomas Sessford, Thomas Triplett, William H. Nally, R. A. city the bidding for the government work was brisk, as the lowest bidders generally received the contract and work was taken sometimes at a very low figure.

First Public Printer.

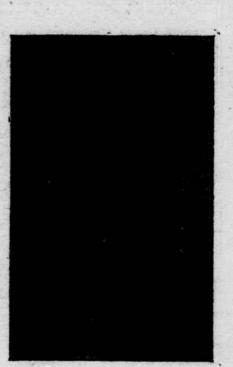

"In 1861 the United States govern bought the printing and binding establishment of Cornellus Wendell and J. C. Maguire, and early in March, after President

James A. Stockman, tecording Secretary Local Union, No. 4, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders

Lincoln's inauguration, he appointed Mr. John D. Defrees as the first superintendent of public printing. Shortly after the appointment of Mr. Defrees the wages of the bookbinders in the government bindery were increased to $14 per week, and in a short time thereafter the war broke out and a great many members of the society sulisted in the service. Bookbinders then became scarce, and as the prices of commodities increased, wages had to go up.

"In February, 1863, the compensation was increased to $16 per week, in December, increased to $16 per week, in December, 1863, to $18; in June, 1864, to $21, and in November, 1864, to $24. The wages of the bookbinders remained at the latter figure until the passage of the act of February 16, 1877, which reduced them to 40 cents per hour, or $3.20 per day of eight hours. "From 1863 to 1868 the Bookbinders' Society had a standing committee before each session of Congress advocating the passage of the eight-hour law. It was als affiliated with the Workingman's Assembly an organization similar to the Central Labor Union, and in all demonstrations, pa-rades, public meetings, etc., the Bookbind-ers' Society took a prominent part.

Strikes and Lockouts.

"During the early days of the society and also during the war strikes were of common occurrence. Any infringement of their rights and privileges was resented immediately, and in most cases they were successful. One of the longest and most stubborn battles they had was in the year 1863. At that time there was no uniform scale of wages, the compensation paid running from $14 to $18 per week. The bookbinders and the printers decided to strike for a uniform scale of $18 per week for day hands and eight hours per day. When the time arrived for the struggle the printers weakened and refused to join the binders, who went out alone, and after a contest of seven weeks, in which many exciting incidents took place, a compromise was effected, Public Printer De-frees allowing them the increase of wages, but stating it was not in his power to grant a decrease in the hours of labor.

Marines and Pickets.

"During the strike a company of ma rines were on duty around the office, and the strikers had their pickets at the depot and in the vicinity of the office so as to "In 1868 they succeeded in having the eight-hour law passed, and at a regular meeting held on July 1, 1868, a resolution was introduced and unanimously adopted, setting forth that:

"Congress having passed an act makout the government workshops of the United States, thereby tending to ameliorate the physical and mental condition of the working classes of this country, also establishing a precedent which will sooner or later be followed by all the private manufacturing establishments throughout the country, we, the Journeymen Book-the country, we, the Journeymen Book-binders' Society of Washington, D. C., recognize in the passage of said act, an acknowledgment of that which is justly due the workingmen of this government. Respond to Call to Arms. "During the war the younger members of the society went to the front, and in July, was in close proximity to the city of Washington a call for volunteers was issued to defend the capital city. Every member of the Bookbinders' Society, numbering ninety-five in all, responded to the call, and, laying down their tools and aprons they marched to the War Department, headed by the foreman of the bindery, Mr. George P. Goff, and were mustered in as Company G. Interior Regiment, with the following officers: Capitain, George P. Goff; first lieutenant, Charles Lemon; second lieutenant, John J. Byrnes; first sergeant, Varden Bishop.

"After all the members were sworn in 1864; when Gen. Jubal A. Early's army

"After all the members were sworn in they were dismissed to await further orders, and shortly afterward the Sixth Army Corps made its appearance, and after a short fight Gen. Early retreated. Of the ninety-five members who were mustered in on that eventful day forty-two years ago, less than twenty are alive today. As I scan the roster of that famous Bookbinders' Regiment I note the following members who are still active members of the union and employed in the government bindery: Thomas B. Penicks, Varden Bishop, H. C. Espey, M. B. Gordon, J. H. C. Hollins, A. G. Hullett, R. H. Marcellus, William H. Moran, Thomas O. May and R. B. Harford.

"In April, 1865, when President Lincoin was assassinated, the following call was issued for a special meeting:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17, 1865.

"To the President of the Journeymen Bookbinders Society:

"We, the undersigned, members of the society, respectfully request that a meeting of the same be keld on this (Monday) evening, at such time and place as you may designate for the purpose of taking some action in regard to the sad calamity that has befallen our country."

"From the close of the war to the present time the society has been active in advancing the cause of organied labor, and when appealed to for aid, assisted every labor organization as far as their means would allow. When the great Chicago fire tooplace in 1871 the Chicago bookbinders appealed to the craft throughout the country. Every member of the Journeymen Bookbinders' Society subscribed one day's pay, 44, and as there were over one hundred members the sum amounted to over $500.

"In the great strike of machinists at the Mt. Clare shops in Baltimore in 1866 they donated $200; to the Journeymen Plasterers they donated on two occasions $200, to the telegraph operators' strike, $100; to the telegraph operators' strike, $100; to the bricklayers and granite cutters, $100 each, and also sums from $10 to $100 to several other organizations. They subscribed generously to the fund for the Galveston flood sufferers, and recently they forwarded over $200 to San Francisco Control of the San Francisco $800 to San Francisco for the relief of the sufferers of earthquake and fire, and, in fact, in every instance when appealed to for aid they cheerfully responded. Beginning of National Organization.

"In the formation of a National Bookbinders' Union they were ever active, and on several occasions they endeavored to form a national organization. In 1886 a committee was appointed to draft a circular, which duty being formed, the circular was sent broadcast throughout the country, calling upon their fellow craftsmen to organize but owing to the disorganized state of the country at the close of the war the com-mittee's efforts were not successful.

Succees Crowns Efforts. "In 1868 and 1883 committees appointed for the same purpose, and at the convention of bookbinders held in Cincinnati, Ohio, May 4, 1886, the bookbinders of Washington were represented by a delegate. Mr. H. S. Linker. who was elected first vice president, but as that organization became the International Bookbinders' Assembly of the Knights of Labor, and proved to be unsuccessful, the object they sought to ob-tain was not accomplished until 1892, when the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders was organized at Philadelphia and the

From February 16, 1877, the date of the passage of the appropriation bill reducing the pay of the mechanics in the govern-ment printing office from $4 per day to $3.20, until its final restoration they never let a session of Congress pass without a committee before that body endeavoring in every way to have the old rate of wages restored.

"October 4, 1898, Charles W. Nelson, president of the local, tendered his resignation, and J. L. Feeney was elected his successor. He immediately took up the matter of the restoration bill and at his re-election at the December meeting appointed himself as a "December 19, 1898, Senator Gorman introduced the bill in the Senate. It was deemed best before the introduction of the bill to invite Columbia Typographical Union to join issue with the bookbinders, but the president, Mr. E. C. Jones, hesitated to do so, as he stated the printers had appointed a committee for that purpose. He was informed that unless the committee having the matter in charge were requested to withdraw and only the president of the union permitted to have the matter in charge the bookbinders would go it have charge the bookbinders would go it alone.

"After a little delay and several consultations the arrangements were agreed to.

Struggle for Benefits.

"The bill passed Congress so late in the session that it prevented an appropriation to carry the bill into effect, and as the increased compensation amounted close to $300,000 the public printer was somewhat in a quandary. As Congress had failed to make an appropriation, he had no money available to pay the increased rate of wages, and it would be impossible to put the law into effect July 1. He stated he the law into effect July 1. He stated he was advised by counsel, his bondsmen and friends that it would be unlawful to pay out money that was appropriated for another purpose. The president of the Printers' Union acquiesced, but the president of the Bookbinders' Union objected. June 9, at the request of the president of the union, the arbitration committee issued a call for a special meeting to be held June 27 for a special meeting to be held June 27 for the purpose of amending the constitution preventing any bookbinder, as a member of the union, from working in the govern-ment bindery at a less rate than 50 cents per hour.
"The night of June 27 the meeting hall wa packed with the members, as the vote to be taken was in reality declaring a strike.

be taken was in reality declaring a strike. Objection was raised by several members to the legality of the meeting and the president's decision was appealed from, but upheld. After a report by the president and considerable debate, the motion to amend the constitution was adopted by a rising vote, only one being recorded in the negative. tive.
"The public printer was notified the next "The public printer was notified the next day of the vote taken at the meeting, and June 29 he sent for the president of the union and stated that after further consultations with friends he had decided to take the risk and put the law into effect July 1, and pay all printers and bookbinders the new rate, as passed by Congress, 50 cents per hour. The president of the bookbinders told him he would not regret his decision, and that President McKinley would be requested to approve it. President McKinley did approve the action of Public Printer Palmer, and he also received a vote of thanks from the Central Labor Union and the American Federation of Labor. It was found before the year had expired that Congress had inserted figures making the law only good for one year, and it was necessary to have it enacted again, which was done without a great deal of trouble and no expense whatever to the unions.
